MOOT PROPOSITION

1. The Republic of Azuria is a diverse and vibrant nation in South Asia, home to a population of approximately 150 million people. Known for its rich cultural heritage and a rapidly expanding economy, Azuria comprises various ethnicities, languages, and religions that reflect its deep historical roots. The nation gained independence in 1952 after a prolonged struggle against colonial rule, and since then, it has developed into a dynamic democracy. In this political landscape, issues of civil rights and individual freedoms are crucial to Azurian society, while simultaneously deliberating upon the various instances of terrorism in Azuria, particularly emanating from its neighboring State, there was a need for a fortified law preventing the unlawful activities. Consequently, the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967 (UAPA) was enacted by the Parliament of Azuria.
2. Danyal Kadeem, born in 1980 at Vahini Nagar in the Dellori State of Azuria, grew up in a modest household that followed Solarism and emphasized education. His passion for history guided him to Sofiabab Public School, after which he pursued an undergraduate degree in History at Johari Lal College, Dellori. This academic path set in motion Danyal's future as a notable activist and public figure in Azuria.
3. Following his undergraduate studies, Danyal attended Salarjung University (SJU) for an M.Phil. and Ph.D. in History, where his political activism took flight. He joined the Democratic Students' Union (DSU), a leftist organization that was vocal about government policies and advocated for social justice. The DSU played a crucial role in Danyal's development as an activist leader as he organized campaigns on behalf of marginalized communities, establishing a reputation of a passionate advocate for civil rights.
4. Danyal gained national attention in 2016 during an incident at SJU, wherein he along with the other students were accused of raising anti-national slogans, during the protest campaigns criticizing the governmental policies. This resulted in Danyal's arrest, which sparked widespread debate over free speech and nationalism in Azuria. Many believed that the government's response was excessive, while others argued that the slogans threatened national integrity. This experience strengthened Danyal's resolve to champion the cause of civil liberties and resist government overreach.
5. In 2019, the Azurian government enacted the Citizenship Amendment Act (CAA), leading to mass protests nationwide due to its perceived bias against followers of Solarism. Danyal emerged as a prominent figure in the protests, rallying for inclusivity and equality. He argued that the CAA endangered Azuria's secular values, earning further admiration and criticism as he organized peaceful demonstrations in major cities across Azuria.

6. In February 2020, Azuria witnessed violent riots in Dellori during a visit by the U.S. President Arnold Kenny. Amidst the unrest, the government declared Dellori as a curfew zone to curb escalating protests. The Dellori Police alleged that Danyal, alongside other activists, orchestrated the unrest to incite communal discord. On September 13, 2020, he was arrested under the newly amended Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967 (UAPA), which allows for stringent actions against terrorism. The government alleged that his hateful rhetoric in major cities across Azuria led to the violent riots in Dellori causing internal unrest across the country, a charge that positioned him as a threat to national security. The arrest, the first of its kind under the amended UAPA, marked a significant shift in the government's approach to dissent.

7. Based on inputs received by the Government, the Ministry of Home Affairs intercepted phone calls of the key members of the DSU, who were actively protesting Danyal's arrest. Acting on these interceptions, the Ministry directed the National Investigation Agency (NIA) to initiate an investigation into Danyal's activities. While the investigation was still ongoing, the government declared the DSU a terrorist organization under the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act and swiftly detained all individuals associated with the group, citing national security concerns.

8. The UAPA's 2019 amendments introduced Sections 35 and 36, enabling the government to designate individuals, not just organizations, as terrorists. The expanded powers were criticized for enabling the government to target dissenters without trial or judicial oversight, sparking concerns over arbitrary use against political opponents. Danyal's designation as a terrorist under these new provisions became a test case for the implications of the amended UAPA.

9. Both the DSU and Danyal, in a bid to challenge this designation, submitted an application to the government under Section 36 of the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, seeking a review of their classification as a terrorist organization and Danyal's status as a designated terrorist. However, their application was summarily rejected by the government, once again citing national security concerns. The rejection came without providing any detailed justification or disclosure of evidence, and the government invoked confidentiality under national security.

10. The amendments to the UAPA, particularly Sections 35 and 36, were widely criticized for granting arbitrary powers to the government without adequate safeguards. As per the said provisions, the Central Government shall have the power to designate any organisation or an individual 'as Terrorist', 'only if it believes' that such organisation or individual is involved in terrorism. Legal experts and civil rights advocates argued that the provisions lacked transparency and procedural fairness, violating fundamental principles of due process as well as international obligations under the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) and United Nations guidelines on human rights while countering terrorism. The ability to designate individuals as terrorists based on broad and vaguely defined criteria was seen as a dangerous tool that could be wielded against political opponents and activists. Danyal's case exemplified these concerns, prompting calls for a reevaluation of the law's scope and application.

11. In response to escalating unrest and legal challenges, two writ petitions were filed in the Supreme Court of Azuria contesting the constitutionality of Sections 35 and 36 of the UAPA. The Petitioners argue that this amendment gives arbitrary power to the government to target voices of dissent and opposition. The first, Writ Petition No. 550 of 2025, was submitted by Shalini Rao, a public-spirited advocate who initially raised her concerns through a letter to the Chief Justice of Azuria. The Chief Justice, recognizing the gravity of the issues raised, converted Rao's letter into a formal writ petition. Rao's petition emphasized the potential misuse of the UAPA amendments and their implications for civil liberties, calling for a thorough examination of the law's alignment with constitutional principles.

12. Rao's petition argued that the UAPA amendments violated due process and natural justice by permitting the arbitrary designation of individuals as terrorists without sufficient evidence or the chance for defense. She stressed the need for judicial oversight and accountability in the application of anti-terror laws, asserting that the broad powers granted to the executive posed a significant threat to democracy and the rule of law in Azuria, thereby infringing on Articles 14, 19, and 21 of the Azurian Constitution.

13. The second writ petition, No. 560 of 2025, was filed by the Association for Civil Liberties and Justice (ACLJ), an organization committed to safeguarding civil rights. ACLJ argued that Sections 35 and 36 of UAPA contravene Articles 14, 19, and 21 of the Azurian Constitution by bestowing arbitrary powers upon the government without adequate safeguards for individual rights. They argued that the Act was being leveraged to silence dissent, warning that its misuse set a dangerous precedent for curtailing freedom of speech. ACLJ also alleged that the Government uses this Act primarily to target followers of Solarism.

14. The Supreme Court has consolidated both petitions and decided to adjudicate the matter on these issues:

I. Whether the Writ Petitions are amenable to the Writ Jurisdiction of the Honorable Supreme Court of Azuria?

II. Whether the Unilateral Power of the Executive to designate an Individual as a Terrorist Under Section 35 and 36 of the UAPA violates the fundamental Principles of Criminal Jurisprudence, Rule of Law and Natural Justice?

III. Whether the 2019 amendment to the Unlawful Activities (Prevention) Act, 1967, is manifestly arbitrary and violative of Articles 14, 19 and 21 of the Constitution?
